San Francisco Police Department: 40 of 42 San Francisco Police Officers Fired San Francisco police officers have been fired and relieved of duty for embezzlement, extortion, forgery, and other crimes in a sweeping probe that includes more than 40 dismissed officers working at the department’s lowest levels, according to newly released documents. As many as 40 officers were dismissed — including 15 rookie police officers — in a wide-ranging review that focused on officers on patrol. Seven officers who were dismissed faced felony charges for offenses that include embezzlement, extortion, forgery, falsifying official records and identity theft, the San Francisco Chronicle reported Thursday. “The investigation spanned from January 2016 to March 2017 and included the department’s internal affairs unit and the district attorney’s office,” acting Police Chief William Scott said in a statement. He developed his own approach to jazz improvisation, and in the process performed all the major music of the 20th century and beyond. He played all the recordings he wanted to play, and the ones he didn’t, he turned into standards. But lately, he’s been turning his back on a lot of the things he gave us. In June, I saw Keith perform live at the Royal Albert Hall. It was a rare occasion, for even though I’m the sort of person who watches everything, watching live jazz is a rarity for me. The reason I chose to go to this concert was that, in addition to the music being (more or less) in my favourite keys, I wanted to see what had been the first time I’d heard him since 2006. Though his playing during that short time was outstanding, I remember a specific moment during that 2006 concert – that’s when I realised that he wasn’t going to be doing anything remotely new, because it’s not as though my skills as a saxophonist had undergone some kind of transformation overnight. He was playing with the passion and intensity of a man who’d taken up the instrument after 60 years of training. However, at the end of

The first thing you notice about the Spanish interior is its colour. Unlike in Italy, the Spanish don’t consider the colour of their buildings or furnishings to be the most important thing about them, and rarely do they incorporate it into their architecture. At first glance this is strange, for in their day-to-day lives they associate colour with joy and fertility, and are wary of dark colours and anything associated with funerals. So why then do they choose to live in a world of grey and brown? The Normans have a saying, “In everything, just as in everything else, put your soul into it and make it your own”. This is a good rule of thumb when it comes to making something worthwhile in life, and can be applied to decorating as well. A bit of ‘creative soul’ can make a room seem welcoming, and transforming a dull wall to a vibrant patterned wallpaper can have an instant impact on how the room feels to someone walking into it. Conversely, a room can have a lovely, peaceful feel about it, and provide a therapeutic retreat for the soul, yet still be too clinical and soulless. A big wall, for instance, can appear stark and uninviting, as if it has no personality of its own. They want their walls to be themselves, unique individuals. Gone are the days when you could decorate and furnish your home to suit your previous needs and tastes. Perhaps you sold up and need to start all over again, or your tastes have changed, or you’ve discovered the joys of simplicity. Either way, you want your home to be a reflection of your personal tastes, not of a foregone era. The world is now a different place, and you want to make sure that you have room to live in it, not be one of the many who find themselves trapped in it. It’s time to start living in the present, not the past. So, where do you start? This is easier said than done, as everybody’s tastes, and tastes change over time. You may think that you want a traditional home, yet find that you just aren’t up to looking at the way people lived in the past anymore. Perhaps you’ve always wanted to redecorate your home in a more streamlined, contemporary style, and have just never had the time to make the changes. Perhaps you’ve always wanted to
